

When ICE Comes to Your Workplace: A Guide for Public Employees

Public employees are the backbone of the services that keep our communities safe, functional and just.

Whether you work in a courthouse, public school, state agency, hospital or municipal office, your role is essential to strengthening public trust and upholding democratic values.

Due to recent changes to immigration policy, you may find yourself on the frontlines of immigration enforcement if Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) officers or other federal agents come into your workplace seeking information or access. As a public worker, it's important to understand your rights and responsibilities when these situations arise—not just to protect yourself and your colleagues, but to ensure that the communities you serve are treated with dignity and fairness.

This guide was created to help you navigate these encounters. Local laws, agency protocols and collective bargaining agreements may vary, so it's critical to stay informed and connected.

If ICE (or another agency, such as Customs and Border Protection) comes to your workplace, immediately notify your supervisor and your union representative. By staying informed and standing together, we can protect our rights and uphold due process.

Institutional preparedness is key!

Despite the changes to immigration policy, everyone in the United States has constitutional rights, including the right to remain silent, the right to an attorney and the right to due process. It's important that your places of work take proactive steps in ensuring that immigration enforcement actions do not interfere with the delivery of services or compromise the trust you have built with community members. Remember, it's not just about protecting the community members you serve, but also protecting your colleagues and union siblings who could be targeted as well because of their immigration status.

If your workplace hasn't created a plan of action to deal with immigration enforcement actions, it's important to be proactive and create one. It's important to clearly mark spaces that are private vs. public. Individuals have a right to refuse warrantless searches of private areas. Different legal standards apply to public areas like lobbies, as opposed to private areas, staff lounges and break rooms if they are clearly marked.

ICE (or other federal agents) just showed up at your workplace—here's what to do

If federal agents carrying out immigration enforcement actions show up at your workplace, remain calm. You are not obligated to engage with or assist ICE officers right away. Follow your worksite protocols for this situation. If protocols don't exist, take the time to go through these steps, protecting your individual rights and following the law.

1. Request identification

- a. Federal agents may be in uniform, armed and easily identifiable. Still request identification.
- b. If officers are in plain clothes and masked, ask them to identify themselves and what agency they are from with an official credential.

2. Notify your supervisor

a. If a federal agent is present, notify your supervisor. They will likely be aware of any state or local legislation that affects how you must cooperate with ICE and can help support you through the process.

3. Request documentation (warrant, subpoena, court order)

- a. Federal agents must have a valid warrant to search and/or seize anything from your workplace. Ask if they have documentation from a federal judge that authorizes their actions.
 - i. If federal officials attempt to search or seize something without this documentation, unless your department has an outstanding agreement with other terms, this is illegal. Note their badge numbers and names and alert your supervisor immediately.
- b. Federal agents may show you an administrative warrant. These documents have no relevant legal force and require no action by non-ICE agents (you). They are not issued by a judge and cannot alone authorize search and seizure. See Example 1 below for ways to identify an administrative warrant.
- c. If federal agents have a federal or judicial warrant, subpoena or other court order, you must comply with what the document requires. Remember, judicial warrants, subpoenas and other court orders are limited in scope for the actions listed. Contact your supervisor first to clarify your responsibilities. See Examples 2 and 3 for ways to identify these documents.

4. Next steps

a. If federal agents do not have a valid court order, you are under no obligation to take action on their behalf or provide them with any information.

- b. If federal agents have a valid judicial warrant, subpoena or court order, they may be:
 - i. Looking for a specific person or group of people.
 - ii. Asking for specific records or data.
 - iii. Requesting contact information.
 - iv. Sweeping the area/worksite.
- c. You must comply with the information request if federal agents have a valid warrant. It is illegal to obstruct or interfere with an arrest.
 - i. Pay attention to what information the warrant covers. You are only required to provide this information to ICE officials. A supervisor can help with this clarification.
 - ii. You are not required to comply with any requests outside those detailed in the warrant.

5. Contact your union representative

- a. Ask any questions about worksite protocols for handling immigration enforcement actions. Who should be contacted? Ask about if and how you should cooperate with ICE.
- b. Clarify what happens if you refuse to cooperate, including any disciplinary action that may be taken against you.
- c. Protect yourself from legal consequences of compliance. You should not be utilized as de facto ICE agents to carry out immigration enforcement actions.
 - i. If you participate in immigration enforcement action that is discriminatory, causes unlawful detention or otherwise violates a person's rights, you or your employer could be liable for damages.

Frequently asked questions

1. Will ICE officials be working with state/local agencies?

This depends on the state, county and local laws that have been adopted. ICE alone does not have the authority to command state and local agencies. However, some localities have adopted 287(g) agreements, which allow state and local law enforcement officers to collaborate with the federal government to enforce federal immigration laws. Always ask for identification and relevant legal justification (a warrant, subpoena or other court order) before sharing information.

2. What am I legally required to provide to ICE if asked?

There is generally no legal requirement to do anything for ICE, including providing records or other information, unless there is a signed judicial warrant, subpoena or other court order. However, if your specific agency, employer or collective bargaining agreement includes cooperation requirements, additional administrative consequences may apply. If ICE presents a court order, you are obligated to provide the specific records cited in the order. Always contact a supervisor before providing any records. Never obstruct, lie to or interfere with an ICE officer—doing so is illegal.

3. Do I need to report every undocumented individual I encounter to ICE?

No, private citizens are not under any obligation to report undocumented immigrants or volunteer any other information to ICE. There are select government agents that may have some such obligation, but this mostly applies to law enforcement. Refer to the resources below and speak to your supervisor to clarify individual responsibilities.

a. Am I obligated to share any immigration information with ICE?

No, you are not required to share any personal identifiable information with ICE or any other federal agent unless required by law. If you work at a school or health center, there are other privacy protections and laws that prohibit the sharing of personal identifiable information. Sharing that information without the consent of the individual is a violation of their civil rights, and you could face penalties.

4. What happens if I do not cooperate with ICE?

It is not illegal to decline cooperation with ICE. However, if ICE presents you with a court order, you must comply with the terms of that order. Obstructing, lying to or interfering with a law enforcement officer is illegal. It is also illegal to harbor undocumented immigrants. Declining to cooperate with ICE does not constitute harboring undocumented immigrants.

a. What does it mean to harbor undocumented immigrants?

It is illegal to "conceal, harbor or shield" unauthorized individuals in the United States. Simply knowing of an undocumented person's status does not constitute harboring. Harboring is recognized as facilitating an undocumented immigrant's residency in the United States by preventing authorities from detecting them, providing direction on how to obtain false documentation, or substantially concealing them.

b. Can I be arrested for not complying with ICE?

No, declining to help ICE gives them no basis to arrest or detain you. However, if you attempt to obstruct, lie to or threaten an ICE officer, you are breaking the law. This includes declining to comply with a judicial warrant, subpoena or other court order.

5. What if ICE is outside my workplace?

If ICE is outside your workplace, you may ask them to leave, but they are able to remain in public spaces like any other person. If they are in a public area inside your workplace (such as a lobby or waiting room), you may ask them to leave unless they provide valid documentation of a warrant or subpoena. Always write down ICE officers' names and badges if they are waiting outside your place of work or inside a public area.
