

Congress' Reconciliation Bill Will Make Higher Education Less Affordable and Accessible for Kentucky Students

Access to affordable, high-quality higher education has been pivotal in creating pathways to the middle class throughout our history. Everyone has the right to pursue their dreams without being burdened by a lifetime of debt, and federal funding protects these pathways to the middle class regardless of someone's ability to pay upfront or outright.

Congress is considering proposals that will strip critical funding from our colleges and universities to pay for tax cuts for the wealthy, making a college education more unaffordable for all of us and completely unobtainable for some, just to give billionaires another handout.

If enacted, these policies will:

Increase costs for students and their families

✗ Cut more than $300 billion in student aid, making college less affordable and accessible for everyone.

✗ Take away options for income-driven repayment plans for 12.49 million borrowers; the 102,500 Kentucky enrollees in the SAVE plan will see their payments double or triple.

✗ Steal billions from university endowments, which are used to fund financial aid for families and students as well as scientific and critical medical research, as part of a war on higher education that will hurt everyone in the United States. There will now be less funding available to help fund student financial aid and scientific research.

Decrease protections for students and weaken communities

✗ Force 6,650 Kentucky students into private loans lacking consumer protections by eliminating grad PLUS loans, meaning borrowers can be exploited with no way to fight back and eligibility for Public Service Loan Forgiveness will be cut off for most public service workers with a graduate degree.

✗ Threaten programs that prepare critical professions—like early educators, teachers and social workers who help our students—by eliminating programs' access to federal financial aid based on income level and forcing colleges and universities into offering specific and limited courses of study.

✗ End borrower defense relief for students who were scammed by predatory colleges, such as the 15,590 defrauded students in Kentucky who've successfully recouped their losses.
