

Congress' Reconciliation Bill Will Make Higher Education Less Affordable and Accessible for South Carolina Students

Access to affordable, high-quality higher education has been pivotal in creating pathways to the middle class throughout our history. Everyone has the right to pursue their dreams without being burdened by a lifetime of debt, and federal funding protects these pathways to the middle class regardless of someone's ability to pay upfront or outright.

Congress is considering proposals that will strip critical funding from our colleges and universities to pay for tax cuts for the wealthy, making a college education more unaffordable for all of us and completely unobtainable for some, just to give billionaires another handout.

If enacted, these policies will:

Increase costs for students and their families

✗ Take away options for income-driven repayment plans for 12.49 million borrowers; the 131,200 South Carolina enrollees in the SAVE plan will see their payments triple.

✗ Leave half of all students without enough financial aid by cutting the amount of grants or loans available to help them afford college.

✗ Charge $327,270.40 in surplus fees, on average, to each college in South Carolina for students to access the federal student loans they applied and qualified for.

✗ Reduce or eliminate Pell grants for 70,074 low-income students in South Carolina, who use the grants to help pay for college.

Decrease protections for students and their families

✗ Force 4,609 South Carolina students into private loans lacking consumer protections by eliminating grad PLUS loans, meaning borrowers can be exploited with no way to fight back.

✗ End borrower defense relief for students who were scammed by predatory colleges, such as the 27,950 defrauded students in South Carolina who've successfully recouped their losses.

AFT Higher Education

✗ Remove safeguards against high-cost, low-quality career-education programs that leave an estimated 3,637 South Carolina students with unaffordable loan payments and no job prospects, by eliminating the gainful employment rule.
